Part I.

Have you ever heard of butterfly migration? They travel from one place to another during the year. One of the best-known examples is the Monarch butterfly migration.

They can't survive during the cold winters in the north and the center of the United States, so they fly south and west each autumn because it is warm all year around there. However, their overwintering sites are under threat because the trees they could rest in are cut down for more space to build roads, houses, and farms. Look at the chart and answer the following questions.

Year	Number of Butterflies	Number of Trees
2011	120,000	100,000
2012	100,000	80,000

Sean Brown works as an English teacher in Hope High School in Taiwan. Two students are interviewing him now.

Tom: Why did you come to Taiwan?

Sean: Two of my college classmates are from Taiwan. They invited me to work in their country. So here I am.

Sam: How long have you been working in Taiwan?

Sean: I've been here for one year and nine months.

Tom: What do you think of the students here in Taiwan?

Sean: Many of them are hard-working. They listen carefully in class and do quite well on the tests. But when they are asked to talk about their thoughts, they are often too shy to speak out what they think about the issue. That really surprised me at first.

Sam: Do you miss your family in the UK?

Sean: Of course, I miss them so much. Luckily, I can talk with them on the cellphone anytime, and they get to know everything about me on my Facebook. Last month, my parents and my brother, Jack, flew to Taiwan to visit me. I showed them around. They were so impressive about this island that they promised to come every year as long as I'm working here. Some of my students' parents invited all of my family to spend the weekend with them. How warm-hearted they were!

Tom: Will you go back to the UK?

Sean: Maybe, but I'm not sure. Whether I'm here or not, I'll miss this land and the friendly people here.

Sam: Thank you for the interview.

Sean: No problem. Nice to talk to you.
